BRIEF INTRODUCTION TO AYURVEDA

ORIGIN

The word Ayurveda has been derived from Sanskrit. "Ayu" means "life" and "Veda" means "science": 'the science of life'. Ayurveda is considered to be the originator of all healing techniques as it predates all forms of healing systems. It was developed in India some 5000-6000 years ago; and, is currently, the oldest practiced healing system in the world. Although it may be an ancient and well-known healing system in the East, it is still relatively new in the West and is slowly finding its rightful place in western herbal science.

AYURVEDIC PRACTICE

Ayurveda is an integrated system and specializes in natural herbal remedies designed to correct imbalances in the body before it manifests in disease. Preventative measures are emphasized rather than cures. Ayurveda focuses on the whole person, body and mind, it encompasses a very broad spectrum of healing modalities like herbs, yoga, exercise, nutrition, diet, lifestyle, massages, meditation, "mantra's" – (Vedic chants), sauna therapy, aromatherapy and the use of certain colored gems - with each color positively affecting a particular ailment.

Ayurveda was brought to us by wise men/physicians of that time through their reverence for nature and their understanding that the five elements, earth, water, fire, air and ether are the foundation of the gross world and are also represented within us.

Ayurveda practices the objective of maintaining optimum health. Ayurvedic formulations focus more on the whole herb and not just the active ingredient. With extensive research into the plant components, it has been shown that the biological synergy of whole plants has yielded exceptionally effective formulas that may be offered with complete confidence at a remarkably high rate of success. Dr. Deepak Chopra of the Chopra Foundation said, "it is the plant that has the intelligence of the universe within itself, isolating the active ingredient from the plant, as is being done in Western medicine is like taking the intelligence and leaving the wisdom behind".

AYURVEDA HERBS FROM INDIA

In India, plant knowledge was systematically recorded in Ayurveda and used in the health care system. Over 2000 medicines are contained in the Indian Materia Medica, most of them are from plants, and there are some 20,000 medicinal plants and herbs found in India. Whole plants are used in Ayurveda and not just the active ingredient.

AYURVEDA AND BEAUTY

Long ago, health and beauty were considered to be short lived. Average adult life expectancy was about 30 years and humans let the harsh living conditions take its toll. Then over 6,000 years ago Indian wise men searched within the vast resources of nature to extend this ephemeral health and beauty to a lifetime.

These sages discovered the secret of eternal youth. Ayurveda is the only system in the world to have paid such close attention to the process of ageing. These ancient sages found that certain plants had a startling effect on skin and hair. They learnt how to make use of the powers of nature to restore human beings to a state of perfect health.

They saw that the powers of nature - the heat of the sun, light, air, water, minerals and plant substances had immense therapeutic value and played an important role in leading a healthy, fulfilled and aware life. It found that certain combinations of herbs preserve not only youthful skin and hair but also a firm body. Among those who practice the Ayurvedic way of life, it is not uncommon to see people in their sixties or seventies with the youthful radiance of someone 20 years younger than them.

THE STORY BEHIND KAMA

In 2001, four people came together and decided to use their international design, business and marketing skills to bring Ayurveda out into the forefront and present it – pure and authentic, to the rest of the world. Rajshree Pathy comes from South India, the home of Ayurveda. Her first introduction to Ayurvedic products was at the age of three! Her appreciation of this ancient holistic way of life came only after she rediscovered Ayurveda upon returning to India after her business degree from Harvard University.

After acquiring a post grad degree from Princeton, Vikram Goyal spent years at the investment bank Morgan Stanley in New York and Hong Kong, marketing Indian investment products in the US, Europe, Australia and Asia. He relocated to India a couple of years ago and was reintroduced to Ayurveda.

Vivek Sahni a graduate of Parsons The New School for Design, New York, and Dave Chang, a graduate of the Pratt Institute, New York, are possibly the most talked about graphic designers in India and a living testimony to the anti-aging effects of Ayurvedic products.

Their partner is the respected Arya Vaidya Pharmacy in Coimbatore, one of the three testing centers in India approved by the Department of Science and Technology to ensure the strict quality control, effectiveness and authenticity.

AYURVEDIC FACIAL CARE

PURE ROSE WATER

(a 100% natural skin toner)

Botanical name: Rosa Damascena.

Composition: made with more than one ton of rose petals.

Process: steam water distillation.

KAMA Ayurveda Pure Rosewater is made from the roses of Kannauj, a region in North India, rich in white clay soil conducive to stimulating growth in roses. The Kannauj rose is considered special – it has the same specifications as the Bulgarian rose.

The steam water distillation process used to create this wonderful rosewater ensures a high level of hygiene and unmatched purity.

Rosewater is a natural astringent. It balances and restores skin's pH level and helps tighten pores.

Rose water is also a good non-alcoholic toner. Kama rosewater is a good non-alcoholic refresher that helps remove the residue of the previous cleansing procedure such as removing make-up. It refines the pores and tones the skin making it ready for moisturising treatment.

It can also be used to make skin damp before applying Kama Natural Plant Mask (Lavanya) or Kama Miraculous Beauty Fluid (Kumkumadi).

Kama rosewater can also be used as an aftershave. Aftershaves are basically toners, however because most aftershaves are primarily made of alcohol and perfume, they damage the skin by disturbing the recovery of the mantle, which is destroyed by shaving soap and razor blade use. The alcohol will further dry the skin. Rather than using such abrasive products, try using Kama rosewater.

Kama rosewater is an excellent natural refresher which can simply be sprayed onto the face to cool down.
